The Story of Tullibardine

The history of Tullibardine as a location for brewing and distilling is one of the oldest in Scotland, dating back to the 15th Century. The story begins in 1488, when a young King James, IV of Scotland, stopped by before his coronation to purchase beer from the local brewery. This brewery was known for producing fine beer as a result of the local water source. By 1503, the King had granted them a Royal Charter

It was in 1947 that William Delmé-Evans began converting this original brewery into the Tullibardine Distillery. Upon testing the water from the nearby springs, Delmé-Evans knew he had found the perfect location for distilling whisky. Once the whisky has been distilled, maturation takes place in first fill ex bourbon casks to create Tullibardine Sovereign.

With the addition of a bottling plant, Tullibardine is now one of the few distilleries in Scotland to distill, mature and bottle all on site, giving complete control over the process. Only first fill casks to impart maximum flavour and colour.

Matured in first-fill ex-Bourbon Barrels and then for a period of time in 500 Litre Pedro Ximenez Sherry Butts, which gives this Tullibardine its nutty brown colour. There are intense toffee apple notes on the nose with a hint of oatmeal. These notes then combine with a viscous spicy feel and sweet dates on the finish.
